WESTON, UMATILLA COUNTY, OREGON, SEPTEMBER 18, 1885.

With a cadence soft and low

Falls the min! All the heavy grasses seem Bowed with pain! While the tender flowers droot To the sod,

Bent like penitents that kneel To their God; And the trees loom indistinct Thro' the mist. While the roses red and sweet,

That were kissed By the sun to fragrant life, Blanch with fear. From each starry jasmine's cup

Drops a tear Pure as those the angels shed O'er man's fall: And the dark green moss that clings

Drinks the rain up thirstily. On their stalks

Lilies bend their stately heads, Thro' the walks Tiny streamlets, running clear,

Make it seem Like some fairy island viewed In a dream. Oh! my garden brings a Joy To my heart,

As I stand and watch the rain-Far apart From the throng around me there, Who know naught

Of the healing that may come (All unsought) From the hand of nature's God To the soul,

When it pants with weary breath For the goal. When of all our brightest hopes None remain. Life is dark and every thought

Brings but pain-Then in faint gray clouds that veil Brilliant skies, And in sheeted rain that falls, Comfort lies.

When all nature seems to fold 1 In our gricf. From the sympathy the yields Springs relief;

While the flowers teach to us Lessons sweet, At God's feet! Thus the clouds that dim our lives All depart,

From the heart.
